THE MAGIC HOUR

Gōrudo Spritz

The golden hour is the period the colour of the sky goes from red and orange to yellow or, as its name suggests, golden tones, having a warm colour temperature. Lighting is soft, diffused and with little contrast since the sun is low in the sky. Due to the type of light that exists during this period, that doesn't produce strong shadows and harsh lighting, and it's ideal for landscape photography.

Rosé Wine, Lemon Sorbet, Yuzu, Lychee, Cane, Soda

Black & Blue

During the blue hour, the sky has a deep blue hue with cold colour temperature and saturated colours. At the beginning (evening) and at the end (morning), a gradient of colours, from blue to orange, can be seen right in the place of sunset and sunrise. In the evening, the blue hour coincides with the start and end of the civil twilight, just before and after the golden hour, respectively. Because the blue hour occurs during civil twilight, it'll also be a good time for photographing the moon.

Gin, Luxardo Maraschino, Chambord, Blueberry, Citrus, Cane, Sparkling Raspberry

Rouge Blanc

During civil twilight, there is still enough natural light to see and distinguish objects perfectly. The sky is very bright, and the colour of the clouds can be red, orange and yellow to magenta and blue. Of course, it always depends on weather conditions and dust particles in suspension.

At the beginning of civil twilight, just after sunset, the colours of the sky change most rapidly. Clouds in the west are illuminated by orange-red sunlight, while the ones in the east remain in blue and indigo. Generally speaking, civil twilight lasts for about 20 to 30 minutes, depending on the season and latitude.

Cognac, Cointreau, Watermelon & Basil, Apple Cider, Cane, Prosecco

Over The Moon

During nautical twilight, the sky begins to darken considerably, getting a dark blue hue. The horizon line can still be distinguished, and many more stars are visible. It's also possible to capture the full moon at the horizon, just when rising or setting. Although you cannot get a correct exposure of the moon and the landscape in a single exposure, you can still create beautiful moon silhouettes.
